The White Horse Hill is one of the most prominent features in the Vale of the White Horse, a spot well known to the many readers of "Tom Brown's School-days." The White Horse is the figure of a galloping horse, outlined by trenches in the chalk, varying from two to three feet in depth and about ten feet broad. It is 314 feet in length, and covers nearly an acre of ground, and is popularly supposed to be a memorial of the great victory of King the Danes in 871 A.D.
